Programme Perspective

The dynamic scenario of present-day business makes a lot of demands on academia. To facilitate decision-making as well as planning in the dynamic business context, conceptual knowledge is becoming important. An admixture of theoretical knowledge with practical solutions has become essential in a context in which organizations are confronting the increasing challenges of competition, hikes in expectations, quality standards, etc. The Cooperative sector, which is considered to be a third force next to the public and private sectors, takes note of the great transformations in the business environment. The need of the hour is to have a paradigm shift in the management style of cooperatives to do business in tune with their co-operative identity. Keeping these in view, the National Council for Cooperative Training, New Delhi, has redesigned the Higher Diploma in Cooperative Management (HDCM) course with a view to sharpening the analytical and decision-making competence of the managers and potential managers of the cooperative sector.

Objectives of the Course

The course outlines to infuse professionalism with following objectives:

- To provide comprehensive cooperative education to the participants.
